

There has been a lot of ongoing rumbling about the recent rise in gas prices. That's all I've heard lately. But at least that will save you from complaining about the poor old lady next door and her cats. However, I decided to help you get through this crisis by generously sharing: 10 Ways to Fight Rising Gas Prices!

1. Park Your Car.

Yup! You heard that right, you see that space in the garage? Make use of it. Don't drive the car. This is the most obvious solution. If you never pull the old Plymouth into the driveway, it doesn't matter that at today's gas prices it costs $125 to fill a 30-gallon tank or that you only get about 2.51 miles per gallon. If you never drive, you don't care. Of course, I know what you're going to say. "But hey, there are places I have to go, like work. And the children have academic and football training. And then there's shopping, yoga classes, dinner at Davidsons and blah blah blah and.... Okay, I see what you mean. Not everyone can stay at home like me, write not-so-funny articles, and browse through the internet searching for nothing in particular. I completely understand that some of you have lives. But just because you don't drive doesn't mean you can't get around. Right? I mean there are a lot of other cool alternatives you can explore.

2. Take the subway/bus. There is a lot of public transportation system available in many cities that provides an alternative to driving your vehicle. If you live in a city where there isn't one, don't worry: you can always use it to get around. Of course, traveling by public transport also has some disadvantages, but these can be easily overcome with the following simple tips:

Under no circumstances make eye contact with other people. Eye contact is an invitation for someone to attack you.

Whatever happens, never give up your seat to anyone. This is considered a weakness and is seen as an invitation to attack.

Never start a conversation with the person sitting next to or in front of you, no matter how tempted you may be. This is very annoying and can be seen as an invitation to attack. Or worse, someone responds.

Always be alert, and get on and off at the correct stop. Getting off at the wrong stop can result in an instant epileptic seizure.

Never take children on public transport. The other passengers hate children. Children make you a constant prey.

3. Carpool

Interesting, right? It seems so simple. Instead of buying gas, let someone else buy while you enjoy the benefits! Make someone else pay $5.50 a gallon for gas to get your kids to school. Have someone else invest in your retirement fund to cover the gas bill you need to get to and from the office every day. Have someone else find a second job so your SUV is full of gas when your daughter needs to go to the mall. It's that simple. The concept of shared travel is, of course, that everyone takes turns driving. So in a normal carpooling situation, at some point, you will have to use your car and spend money on transporting others. However, this is not a normal carpool situation, but a rather tricky situation kind of carpool. In this scenario, you avoid using your car and force other rideshare participants to choose to walk barefoot on 120-degree asphalt instead of riding with you. You can do this by: Never wash or clean your car. Make it look and smell like a landfill.

Always let the worst-behaving child in the family sit in the front seat. Give your child lots of candy to make him feel good.

Don't talk about anything in the car except your spouse's bad toilet habits, bodily fluids, dangling nails, chest hair, etc.

Only play the worst reggae music there is on the radio. Strong!
You don't have to worry about someone wanting to accompany you again.

4. Get A Horse.

Let's just go back to the good old days. With a strong old horse, you don't just get the advantage of zero gas, but you also eliminate any risk of an auto crash.

5. Get A Bicycle.

Who doesn't miss the pedal? Not only do you get a means of transportation you also get to exercise while in motion. It's like killing two birds with one stone, the perfect multi-task. Don't worry about gas who needs it anyway.

6. Jog.

Let's face it, the advent of the automobile has made a bunch of us extremely lazy, we can't even take a stroll to the supermarket across the street, thereby neglecting our fitness and health. This is a good opportunity to kick start that fitness journey, just put on your gym attire and make it look like you're going for a run while you carry your work clothes in a backpack. You can change when you're a few blocks away from your office at any available convenience.

7. Canoe/Kayak.

This mode is specifically for the waterside dwellers, just paddle your way as close to your destination as the water permits, then walk up the remaining distance to cover on land. Look at the bright side, you don't get to be stuck in traffic for any reason plus you get to have a lot of fun.

8. Teleportation.

We all have our inner Harry Potter abilities. It might seem far-fetched to you right now but I assure you it isn't, just reach deep inside of you, find the porter, and bring it to life. Envision your path especially if you're already familiar with the path, it makes it easier for teleportation. You'll be surprised at how far and how fast you can go anywhere you want. I know that power has been lying dormant beneath you for a long time, but now is the time to call on it and put it to use.

9. Get The Broom.

Don't you think it'll be great if we normalize the witch's means of transportation? Let's be realistic it is the cheapest means of transportation ever known. Bye-bye gas, bye-bye road traffic, and sweaty bodies.

10. Stay At Home.

Yes. Go nowhere. Quit your job, and become a remote worker, Do you need groceries and toiletries? Order online for doorstep delivery. No more diners at the Davidsons. No more school for the kids.

I'm sure all of these are amazing you're probably wondering which to choose right now, I'm glad I could help, just find one that calls to you more and stick with it.
